Planning a Party

How do you celebrate your birthday? Do you have a huge party with lots of friends and activities? Is your party small and with a few friends and family? In the 1920s, when John Kennedy was old enough to remember his birthday celebrations, children's birthdays were celebrated with small parties where the birthday child could select their guests. Before this, children's birthday parties were attended by adults who might bring their children.

Birthday Cakes

President Kennedy celebrated his 44th birthday in 1961 with two parties. The first party was a surprise held by White House staff early in the day. The second was a large party held two days before his actual birthday. The giant cake for this party was designed to look like the White House.

Just Desserts

For his 46th birthday in 1963, President Kennedy was served a Bombe President Sauce Chocolat. This dessert is a dome-shaped ice cream dessert with layers of chocolate and vanilla ice cream with chocolate sauce in between the layers. Click here for a recipe to try at home. Note: This recipe does call for using a stove. Make sure an adult is present when making this recipe.

Want something simpler? President Kennedy was known for liking chocolate and there are many photos of him eating vanilla ice cream. What combinations can you make with those ingredients?

Birthday Presents and Entertainment

When President Kennedy was a child, some of the favorite children's toys were teddy bears, toy cars, wagons, tinker toys, and Morse Code learning sets. During the party, kids played games like tag. When President Kennedy was in office, people had lots of fun dancing at parties. One of the most popular dances was The Twist.
